Abstract

The present investigation, “A Descriptive Analysis of Anglicisms in Ecuadorian Magazines”, took place in Quito, capital of Ecuador.

The aim of this investigation was to analyze the way that anglicisms are used in Ecuadorian magazines. As a sample, the following magazines were chosen “La Casa”, “Gestion”, “Vistazo” and “Hogar”.

The purpose for this study was to investigate the linguistic phenomenon of anglicisms used in Ecuadorian magazines. In order to analyze the data, two methods were used: qualitative and quantitative.

The following results were obtained: quantitatively were found 584 anglicisms in all magazines, and qualitatively: in General interest magazines there have been found 287 anglicisms, so these magazines have the majority of anglicisms, followed by Scholarly magazines where were found 207 anglicisms and in the last position with 90 anglicism found are the Cultural magazines.

As a consequence the great numbers of anglicisms were found in General Interest Magazines as a result of their topic that they have in their articles. In the other hand, the least number of anglicisms was found in Cultural magazines, because they are concentrated in artistic and cultural reports about Ecuador; for that reason these magazines maintain the established style.

Introduction

The presence of Anglicisms is a phenomenon which is a consequence of the incursion by people of other nationalities, and by emigration of people to countries where English language is spoken.

In addition, English language has become a global language and this language is being used around the world capturing more and more of it. Nowadays, English language is used to break barriers in different areas.

For that reason many researchers of linguistics have investigated the origin of different utterances used in Spanish language.

This research is called a Descriptive Analysis of Anglicisms in Ecuadorian Magazines and the principal aim is to research about this linguistic phenomenon.

The purpose of this investigation is to carry out a descriptive and linguistic analysis of written language in Ecuadorian magazines in order to analyze the presence of Anglicism terms in Ecuadorian Spanish language. To identify the syntactic and lexical anglicisms it is necessary to make a deep analysis of the anglicisms found in Ecuadorian magazines regarding syntactic, semantic, and morphological aspects According to variables. Within variables used in this investigation work, are: cultural, scholarly, and general interest magazines. During this investigation, it was noticed that these sources contain the highest number of anglicisms and it was determined which anglicisms are most frequently used.

The use of anglicism in the Spanish written language in our country is an important topic because it provides information about the way English language is influencing our native language with certain terms.

In order to achieve the objectives and determine the influence of anglicisms two methods were used: Qualitative and Quantitative.

Quito was the place where this study was done. During this investigation, different resources such as the technology, the human, the variables and time, were used.

In order to know more about this topic it was necessary to read about some previous studies done in different countries.

The beneficiaries of this study will be the Universidad Técnica Particular de Loja in order to continue the different graduation programs that this University has; and the students who are involved in this study and expect to get their degree as teachers of English as foreign language.

Some of limitation encountered during this investigation was the lack of information about some utterances; and scarce information about terms and their etymology given in the different dictionaries consulted by the author for the investigation purposes.

The topic for this research is very extensive; for that reason there is the possibility to continue the investigations and make a deeper analysis in future studies.

Methodology

A Descriptive Analysis of Anglicisms Used in Ecuadorian Magazines was the theme for this research, which was developed in Quito, it was necessary to choose magazines edited in Ecuador.

The magazines were cultural, scholarly and general interest, this work presented a great piece of work for the author because it was necessary to read all the chosen magazines entirely for the investigation and detailed analysis reasons.

In order to understand better the topic of this investigation, “a descriptive analysis of Anglicisms used in Ecuadorian Magazines”, it was essential to look for previous studies related with this theme and it was necessary to look for that information in some Libraries of the city at the same time on the Internet.

In addition, qualitative and quantitative methods were used for this investigation in order to carry out the analysis and interpretation of the obtained results. These methods helped to arrive to conclusions that are at the end of his research.

For the data collection some instruments were used, particularly in the early stage of this research, such as bibliographic tabs, charts, readings and others which helped to do this study adequately and satisfactorily.

DISCUSSION

Literature Review

English has become a global language. It is one of the most widely spoken languages around the world and Ecuador is not an exception. In Ecuador, more and more people are studying this language in order to become bilingual, but all of them already use a few words of English, sometimes unconsciously. This phenomenon is known as English language interference. In Ecuador it is natural to use anglicisms day after day, especially by young people. They use many of these terms.

The usage of anglicisms depends on some aspects such as the globalization of the language, the influence of TV, the Internet, in other words by the media; they are factors that allow the community to mix between languages.

Some foreign words are recognized by the REAL ACADEMIA DE LA LENGUA ESPANOLA (RAE), but under some changes in their morphological form.

This section includes briefly related topics which have conceptual sustain about important themes that are based in systematic information in order to understand what the research is going to talk about. Additionally it contains various other previous studies, researched before in diverse places of the world.

It is important to mention that the following topics are going to be explained sequentially.

First of all, it is necessary to mention an important science Linguistics as Yanez, (2001, p. 49), according to him “Linguistics is a Science that studies the procedures in order to evaluate a language or several languages, to know its function and to know its organization, how the elements relate each other, how to acquire a language, what is its purpose in society”. The same author states that Language Teachers need to have some knowledge about this science and basically they need to master the language and know how to use it when teaching it.

Besides, Wikipedia free dictionary (2010), explains that Linguistics is divided in: the study of language structure and the study of meaning.

In order to maintain a clearer idea and knowledge, it is important to know that Linguistics encompasses a number of sub-fields that are going to be explained below.

Branches of Linguistics

It is a very extensive theme and very important too. It is going to be listed below.

Morphology

According to Yanez (2001), “Morphology is the distribution and meaning of morphemes that integrate the structures and thoughts of a language”. Additionally Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi, Marcellesi, & Mevel (1986), states that Morphology studies de forms of words, their flexion and derivation.

Semantics

Matthews (1997), states that Semantics is the study of meaning and Yanez (2001), that it is the organization of semantics fields, words and terms meaning.

Phonology

According to Saussure (1972 p. 102), "Phonology is not more than an auxiliary discipline and it refers to the speech only", but according to Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi, Marcellesi, & Mével (1986), Phonology is the science which studies sound of languages. To carry on with these concepts it is time to talk about Syntax.

Syntax

Saussure (1972), establishes that Syntax is about linguistic unit functions, and Yanez (2001) explains that syntax contains several of grammatical structures in order to establish the correct way in the text.

These are not all of the topics; in fact, there are more branches of this interesting science.

Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi & Mével (1986) documented in their Dictionary another branch called Pragmatics which is the aspect of the language that involves the ways in which contributes the meaning and is implicated the speech act

It is important to know more about Syntax, which explains the grammatical structure, and also it has its lexical categories which are important in all languages in order to not lose their correct use according to Yanez.

Lexical Categories

According to Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi & Mével (1986) each one of them has its explanation and use in the sentence, they are listed below.

Verb

These authors state that verb is the word that expresses the process, namely the action, or the subject's. It is subdivided into transitives and intransitives.

Noun

Gleason H.A. (1965, p. 116) defines noun as a name of a person, place, or thing, besides he explains that it is a word which forms a plural by adding -s or the equivalent.

Adjective

Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi & Mével (1986) states that it is the word that qualifies the noun, divided into numerals, possessives, demonstratives, relatives, interrogatives and undefined; they express the quality of the noun.

Pronoun

According to Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi & Mével (1986) pronoun is the word which in all languages is used to refer to and replace another term already used in the statement (anaphoric use) or to represent a participant in the communication or an object presents at the moment to the statement (deictic use). Besides the authors documenting the pronoun is distinguished as a personal pronoun, possessive pronoun, demonstrative pronoun, and relative pronoun, indefinite or interrogative pronoun.

The authors have explained a little about Lexical categories which are important to identify.

Moreover other important themes are included such as:

Contact Languages

It is important to know about contact languages, because human beings have to know that no language is pure; all of them have some of other languages according to Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi and Mével (1986). This is a human condition where a person or a group is obliged to use two or more languages. The authors explained that people can go from one place to another because of different reasons such as for business, etc. The mixture of two or more languages makes a contact language, which can be present for either a short time or forever in people's vocabulary.

Language Vice

It is the wrong form to use the language. There are several types of language vice that have to be shown, known and try to be avoided in order to use language in its proper form. Mejía (2008) says that all those incorrect forms or constructions or uses of the word in the wrong way can often become complicated when interpreting. In other words the incorrect use of a language breaks the semantic thread, violates the grammar rules, and causes ambiguity.

Barbarisms

Escarpanter (1992) explains that barbarism is the incorrect written language, every lack of language against the correct pronunciation or bad use of the language, besides it incurs, therefore, in barbarism when an orthographic mistake is committed, incorrect use of letters, wrong accentuation of words or changing a letter for another one. (p.17)

According to Wikipedia (2010), people use barbarism for different reasons; it could be due to fashion, ignorance issues or just because they want to use them.

Anglicisms

According to Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi & Mével (1986), all borrowed English words are called anglicisms. They are words taken from the English language. In Spanish language the use of anglicisms started in the eighteenth century when elements from the world of politics, sport, new science and technical progress were introduced. Anglicisms were introduced into Spanish in order to enhance or increase the vocabulary in different topics; however Escarpanter (1992) establishes that anglicisms are multiple causes of "interference" in Spanish language. There are many terms accepted by the REA. Others should not be recognized, because there are equivalents in Spanish or because its form does not obey the rules of the language.

Borrowing and loans

According to Dubois, Giacomo, Guespin, Marcellesi & Mével (1986) borrowing and loans is the most important sociolinguistic phenomenon in all contacts of languages. It is, in general, when a group of people is able to use two different languages all the time

Here we have learned further about these important themes, but it is also essential for us to know about magazines, because they are going to be our source for this study.

Magazines

First of all it is important to know when and where the first magazine appeared. In an article published on the Internet by Powered by Wordpress (2008), the origin of magazines dates back to Germany 1663. In the next few years France, Italy, and England also began to publish various types of magazines.

A magazine is a printed publication which is edited periodically, sometimes daily. Like newspapers, magazines earn an income from the sale of copies, subscriptions, and advertisements. Nowadays, there are magazines on a wide variety of topics which target different audiences. Also, as with some newspapers that are published on a daily basis, the magazine has an interval, it could be weekly, monthly and some even come to be published every two months. Magazines are very interesting way of communication.

In addition, it is important to include the studies about Anglicisms done in different universities.

The first one was done in Quito (2008) by Bonilla P., who said in her hypothesis that nowadays many people talk about telecommunications very often, not necessarily the experts in the field of telecommunications but also the users of those services in this area and information networks at the Commercial, Industrial, and Residential; thus, the knowledge of the language on a topic related to technology is applied.

The methods used in this study consisted of two phases: the theoretical and practical. As a result, Bonilla obtained a massive amount of information on the subject, so she had to classify all documentation and develop an initial list of words. However the glossary presented is only a selection of terms chosen according to their frequency of use. In conclusion, the above mentioned author found many unfamiliar words and acronyms and the most of them were only recognize by people that working in that field (telecommunications).

The next study was also done in Quito, by Mera (1970). This author states that there was not another study about anglicisms in Ecuador and her objective in her research was to determine what anglicisms were more commonly used among people in Quito city. Her methodology was simple but clear. Mera spent her time listening to the radio, watching TV programs, and reading newspapers in order to be able to do her research. In addition, she organized the glossary with letters that showed if the anglicisms were legitimate or not.

As a consequence, Mera said that Ecuador is under the influence of English language.

The third study was done by Naranjo (n/d) in Cuba; his hypothesis was vicissitudes of people have been accompanied by the events of their languages, so intersect with other population groups. The method was scientific, as a result for this study involves a historical record of the conduct of this linguistic phenomenon which would have provided a modification of the Cuban Spanish in the first two decades of the last century and the way in which languages contact Cuba - Spanish has been influenced by English.

Consequently for this research the matter was not enough in order to do an extensive research, because Naranjo used old newspapers from 1900 and 1020 years, and the author did not find the material necessary for his research.

The next study was done in Argentina by Fernandez (2001), in his study in order to evaluate the degree of progress of English words into the Spanish in Salta, the author investigated and did a methodical study in the northwest of Argentina and collected the material under a poll revision, having different levels of linguistic communication, different social classes, ages and levels of study, informants made a distribution of lexical material according to the previously selected variables, and applied suitable statistical techniques to capture the progress of English.

This research could have been organized in different ways, way gathered with questionnaires from groups of people of different socio cultural status, age groups, and levels of education. This would probably have provided an extensive variety of Anglicism users. However, the especial characteristic that stands out in this study is that, almost ninety percent were obtained via Internet or e-mail.

In Spain it was done a research by Alcazar (1998) this research is related to medicine. The author states that the presence of Anglicisms in the language is a science related to our health and is not appropriate to any linguistic superiority or almost all of the concepts associated with this topic can be expressed in English. In particular, technological advances through huge resources for both researches and the results were spread in magazines and books, in the five continents.

Alcazar based her study in biomedical journals, recorded monographic activity, monographic magazine medical files and several more general journals, records of the Royal Academy of Medicine of Zaragoza. The method used by her was selecting only those anglicisms that were repeated often, especially those designated to projects or which refer to certain techniques that are not at risk of becoming obsolete.

Sometimes anglicisms were easily understood and some concepts chosen gave the equivalent only in English. In addition, the case of voices that had no native terms, description with some terms find new phenomena or concepts had become more necessary, added encyclopedic data, as well as with the names of people or places, in order to situate them. After studying these parameters as a result, she found that some exclusive anglicisms were just visible in resources which are clear because neither of them had to collect them.

The last study was done in Colombia by Bedoya & Casanova (2009), in this research they investigated how students used the anglicisms in oral communication, the research was relatively short.

They interviewed 20 students between 17 and 23 years old, ten for each sex. In that way they made a comparison between women and men in the observation and experimentation. They used a tape recorder in order to collect their material for the thesis.

As a result they could see that there was almost no difference in the use of anglicisms between two sexes, which means its socio-economic condition in which each is situated and accordingly to those data collect they obtained the conclusion that both, men and women employed in his repertoire a large number of anglicisms.

Description, Interpretation, and Analysis of Results

Linguistic Analysis

In this section will be included the morphologic and syntactic-semantic study of each word or anglicisms. All of these aspects will be investigated in dictionaries such as Diccionario de Real Academia Espanola and Merriam-Webster Dictionary among others especially for English language.

Bar

According to the definition provided by Merriam Webster Dictionary, the word “bar” is a place where alcoholic drinks are sold and drunk, or the area in such a place where the person serving the drinks stands. Morphologically speaking, it is a noun.

The Royal Spanish Academy Dictionary defines this term as a noun: “Local en el que se despachan bebidas que suelen tomarse de pie, ante el mostrador”.

In the sentence taken from La Casa magazine No. 65, 2009: “Es diciembre en las plazas y en los bares”, “bar” is acting as a noun. The plural is formed adding the suffix “-es”. It does not change in its phonetic form. The word “bar” is pronounced the same way in English and Spanish.

The written form of this term in Spanish has not changed morphologically. It has been accepted by the Royal Spanish Academy.

There is not an equivalent in Spanish referring to this term, so this English word “bar” enriches our language.

Box

Merriam Webster Dictionary describes it as an object or a sport. As an Anglicism, the meaning depends on the context of where the word “box” is used. It could be a sport or an object where things are kept in.

This anglicism “box” comes from the Middle English.

This word “box” is accepted by Royal Spanish Academy as a sport so, it is a noun. However “boxear” is a verb, but “box” has another meaning which refers to a single compartment for horses or for sick people at a hospital.

This word can work as a noun as in the following example taken from “La Casa Magazine” (p.19):

“Entonces también restrinjamos el futbol, el box.....”

However, as previously mentioned, it can be used as a verb too. In Spanish grammar, the verbs are formed by adding the suffixes “-ar, -er, -ir”, so in order to fit Spanish grammar, the word was adapted by Spanish with this change, so the verb is “boxear” as shown below:

“Oscar de la Hoya boxeará hoy”.

It is considered as verb in Spanish because it is an action that is being done by someone. In the last example the word changes its form because it depends on the tense that the verb is being used.

The word “box” also does not change in its written form, but sometimes can endure some changes in the tense. As in English, as in Spanish this word is pronounced the same way, so this word does not change its phonological form.

This word “box” as a sport enriches our language, because it does not have another equivalent, but in order to refer to a compartment as is shown in the meaning above, I do not agree that it enriches Spanish because our language has other equivalents such as “compartimento, sección, pieza, etc.”

Stand

According to the definition provided by Merriam-Webster Dictionary this word “stand” functions as a noun which refers to a small often open-air structure for small trade commerce such as “a vegetable stand” and “a hot dog stand”. Also this term functions as a verb which means “to support oneself on the feet in a straight position”.

The Royal Spanish Academy Dictionary defines it as: “Instalación dentro de un Mercado o feria, para la exposición o venta de productos”.

This term is originally from Middle English and was first used before the 12th century.

The word “stand” is accepted by the Royal Spanish Academy without morphological changes as shown in the following example taken from Gestión Economía y Sociedad magazine (p. 15):

“Se presentaron stands de Consejos Provinciales...”

In this sentence, “stand” is a noun that has a direct relationship with “de Consejos Provinciales”, and this word refers to a place where people show different expositions in a small shop or an area where products can be shown, usually outside or in a large public building, at which people can buy things or get information.

As was explained before, the term “stand” is accepted by the Royal Spanish Academy without morphological changes, however, sometimes in Spanish “Stand” has a little variation in its written form because in Spanish the word has the vowel “e” added at the beginning of the word. This alteration was done in order to maintain the sound of “e”, because in Spanish the consonant cluster “st” does not exist. That is why the morpheme “-e” was added at the beginning of this word, to fit Spanish pronunciation rules.

According to the last edition of the Royal Spanish Dictionary (23th.) the word “stand” without the added prefix “e” is going to be eliminated, instead of the correct manner of writing this word will be “estand”.

Besides, morphologically, “stand” in Spanish language can be inflected adding the suffix “s” in order to form the plural.

This word has its equivalents in the Spanish language such as “casetas” or “pabellón”; however, I think this word enriches Spanish because it is a more specific word and has a slight difference in meaning from its Spanish equivalents, thus it is a word that makes communication more precise and clear.

Chat

According to the definition provided by Merriam – Webster Dictionary, the term “chat” means “conversation” and it comes from English. In Spanish its equivalent is “charla”, and it is also known as “cibercharla”. For that reason this word is not accepted by Real Spanish Academy (RAE). It is used to mean a written snapshot of communication on the Internet among two or more people.

The following example shows the term “chat” used as a noun in the Spanish context “La llegada y expansión del internet, el “chat”, el messenger...”

According to the definition provided by Merriam – Webster Dictionary this word “chat” is a verb, but in the Spanish language, the use of this word originated from the verb “chatear” in order to indicate the action related with information technology, however, this word is not accepted by Royal Spanish Academy.

According to Diccionario Panhispánico de Dudas 2005 (published by the Real Academia Española and the Asociación de Academias de Lengua Española) in June 2007, the word “chat” refers to a communication by Internet that settles the verb “chatear”, and is defined as “it maintains a conversation through using electronic messages”. In Spanish grammar, the verbs are formed by adding the suffixes “-ar, -er, -ir”. In Spanish the word was adapted to conform to this rule, so it becomes the verb “chatear”. It is considered a verb because it is an action and this action is done by someone.

For instance:

“Francisco pasa demasiadas horas chateando con su novia”

In the example, Francisco has done the action “chateando”. In Spanish the word changes its form depending on the tense of the verb. This sentence includes an adjective. The adjective “demasiadas” has a relation with the verb “chateando” because it is the period of time in which the action is being done.

Phonologically, this term “chat” has not changed in Spanish; the pronunciation is the same.

In my opinion, I think this word “chat” is suitable to be used when people utilize the computer to communicate with other people, so I think the term “chat” enriches the Spanish language.

Club

According to the Merriam – Webster Dictionary the word “club” refers to a group of people or society whose members have with similar opinions. Its origin is English.

This word “club” is accepted by Royal Spanish Academy with the same meaning in Spanish “Sociedad fundada por un grupo de personas con intereses comunes y dedicada a actividades de distinta especie, principalmente recreativas, deportivas o culturales”.

In the following example the word “club” has the meaning explained above.

“El club Real Madrid adquirió al portugués...”

The word “club” has the same meaning in English and in Spanish: “a society or group of people sharing the same interest”. In the example, the word “club” is a noun complemented by “Real Madrid”.

Morphologically “club” does not have any variation in its written form.

However; phonetically, “club” has changed in order to accommodate Spanish. The word “club” sounds different in English than in Spanish. In English its pronunciation is /'klɒb/, the vowel “u” is not pronounced clearly, but in Spanish, the “u” sounds are pronounced clearly.

This word “club” is accepted by the Royal Spanish Academy, and for that reason I think the Spanish language is enriched by this word in order to maintain a correct meaning in a context.

Fax

According to the definition provided by Merriam-Webster Dictionary, this term refers to a device in order to send written communications and this word comes from the English language. It is an abbreviation of the word “facsimile”.

This word “fax” is an anglicism accepted by Royal Spanish Academy (RAE). “Fax” is also the abbreviation of “telefax”, which is actually the abbreviation of “telefacximil”. “Telefax” is not frequently used.

“Telefacsimil” consists of “tele”, which means “distance”, “fac”, the imperative verb, from Latin “facere”, which means “haz”; and the Latin adjective “simile”, which means “semejante”. “Telefacsimile = ‘haz semejante’”. In another words it means “reproduce exactamente”.

“En la celda de un fax” is an example that indicates its function as a noun, so in English as in Spanish, the word “fax” has its plural form.

The plural of “fax” is “faxes” (never “faxs”). The English grammar rule defined to pluralize a word that ends in “x” it is necessary to add the suffix “-es” at the end of the word. The Spanish rule according to Seco, Manuel: Diccionario de dudas y dificultades de la lengua española. Madrid: Espasa-Calpe, ¹⁰1998, p. 213 says that the words ending in “x” do not vary in the plural form, but it does not refer to monosyllables such as “fax”.

An important observation in this word is that “facsimile” comes from Latin, but in English language “facsimile” suffered a shortening transformation “fax”, and Spanish adapted this word in order to fit it in the lexical group.

Phonologically, the word “fax” does not change. The pronunciation is the same in Spanish.

The word “fax” is accepted by Royal Spanish Academy REA, but it has its equivalents in Spanish. They are “reproducción, duplicado, copia, etc.”, but it is not used by speakers to communicate among one another about sending written documents by phone. So I think fax enriches the Spanish language and increases the lexicon.

Comic

The Merriam – Webster Dictionary states that “comic” refers to magazine, especially for children, which contains a set of stories told in pictures with a small amount of writing. It also refers to someone who entertains people by telling jokes. For that reason, “comic” can be used as a noun and as an adjective. For instance the word “comic” appears in the example taken from “la Casa magazine No. 70 2010”.

“...creó Historias del Sauce, comic cuyos personajes eran un tucán y el sauce podado de Tonybe, el filósofo de la historia tan citado por Benjamín Carrión en su teoría de la nación pequeña.”

“Comic” acts as a noun describing actors. Analyzing this word morphologically, “comic” was accepted by Royal Spanish Academy and adapted to Spanish by adding a stress mark to the vowel “o” as in “cómico”, following the Spanish written system. The rule indicates “graves” words are the ones that are accentuated on the penultimate syllable, so the accent can be spelling or prosodic. If the words end in “n”, “s” or a “vowel”, there is no inflection.

However, “comic” is sometimes written without the stress mark, but when it is pronounced by people the accent is manifested as in English, so phonologically “comic” does not change in Spanish.

After I have conducted this analysis, I could say this word enriches the Spanish language since people use it more frequently in their speech.

Charter

According to the Royal Spanish Academy RAE “charter” means to rent a vehicle, especially an aircraft, for a special use and not as part of a regular service. “Charter” comes from Middle English and this word is recognized by Royal Spanish Academy. It was found in the example:

“El equipo rento un vuelo charter para viajar a Argentina”.

“Charter” acts as a noun in the sentence followed by the preposition “para” that expresses the usage “charter”.

The Merriam – Webster Dictionary states that this word may act as a noun, a verb and an adjective. This Anglicism can be pluralized in Spanish by adding the suffix “-s” at the end of the word.

In order to be accepted by Royal Spanish Academy, the word “charter” was modified in its written form by adding a stress mark on the vowel “a” because in Spanish “charter” is a “palabra grave” and according to Spanish graphemic rules, these kinds of words have to be stressed.

Phonologically, the term “charter” does not change its pronunciation. In English and in Spanish “charter” is pronounced in the same way. In Spanish the stress mark is added on the vowel “a”.

In addition, this word does not have any equivalent in Spanish, so I think this word enriches the Spanish lexicon and people familiarized gain a richer vocabulary and more varied speech.

Coctel

According to the Merriam – Webster Dictionary, this word refers to an iced drink of wine or distilled liquor mixed with flavoring ingredients. “Cocktail” comes from the English language. This word is accepted by Royal Spanish Academy as shown in the following example, “el coctel mas delicioso se encuentra en la coctelera azul”.

In the sentence above, the word “coctel” is a noun and this word has other derivations such as “conctelera”, “cocteleria”, so the word “coctel” has suffered changes in its morphological constitution.

In the Royal Spanish Dictionary, this word is registered in two manners. The first one is “cóctel” where a stress mark is added on the penultimate syllable according to the rules for “palabras graves”, and the second is “coctel” which does not have any stress mark.

This word is originally written “cocktail”. The Spanish adapted the pronunciation \’käk-,täl\|. Thus, the word is written “coctel”. The consonant combination “ck” is not necessary for this word in the Spanish language.

“Coctel” has its derivation in Spanish and it has suffered some changes in its ending. For instance, in the words “coctelera” and “cocteleria” the suffixes “era” and “eria” were added. The Spanish lexicon is enriched by two more words that do not mean exactly the same thing as “cocktail”, but are related in meaning. The first one is “coctelera”, which refers to a cocktail shaker and the other one is “cocteleria”, which refers to the place where cocktails are sold.

It is necessary to explain that the term “cocteleria” does not exist in the Royal Spanish Dictionary, however this word was found in the following example taken from “Revista Hogar, July 2010 (p. 79)” “Las andanzas de la oscuridad pueden iniciarse en la cocteleria...”

According to this analysis I could say that “coctel” as an anglicism has enriched the Spanish language, because its forms “coctel” or “cocktail” have their derivations and are new words that have been perfectly adapted in Spanish and are frequently used by people in their speech.

Conectar

According to the definition provided by the Merriam – Webster Dictionary this word refers to “establishing a communications connection”. This dictionary also states that “conectar” means “to join or be joined with something else”.

This word comes from the English word “Connect”. In Spanish this word refers to an action. So, it is a verb. According to Spanish grammar, a verb is formed by adding the suffixes “-ar, -er, -ir”. The word was adapted by Spanish following the rules of Spanish grammar.

In the following example the word “conectar” is written in present tense “...con tecnología 3G integrada y modem inalambrico para conectarse en mas de 100 paises”. Sometimes this word changes its syntactic form. It can be an adjective as is shown in the example below taken from Gestión Economía y Sociedad magazine, July 2010:

“Es una gran aldea global conectada.”

Morphologically, “conectar” has suffered many changes in order to be adapted into the Spanish language. Phonologically, it has the same form. It has changed its pronunciation in order to be used in Spanish.

The changes above allow people to recognize this term perfectly as a Spanish word, and for that reason, I think this word enriches our lexicon.

Corporación

According to the Royal Spanish Dictionary, the word “Corporación” refers to an organization with members working for a common purpose. “Corporación” comes from English and is accepted by the Royal Spanish Academy as a noun and it comes from the word “corporation”.

In the following sentence taken from “Gestion Economia y Sociedad magazine, July 2010”: “Estamos viendo cada mas intentos, en su mayoría por parte de corporaciones y de sus abogados...” the word “corporación”, acts as a noun.

It can be pluralized only by adding the suffix “-es” at the end of the word; this word has been adapted to Spanish in its morphological and phonetic forms. Morphologically, there are some transformations; in order to adapt into Spanish, the morpheme “-t” is replaced by “-c”. Spanish adds a stress mark on the vowel “o”, according to the Spanish rules.

This term “corporación” is used in Spanish language and it is adapted and modified according to the Spanish Grammar rules, so I think this word has enriched our lexicon and speech.

Web

The term “web” according to Royal Spanish Dictionary refers to computer science tools. According to the Merriam - Webster Dictionary, this word refers to the tissue of an animal or plant. This term comes from Middle English and is accepted by Royal Spanish

Academy. I found this word in the example below taken from “Economia y Sociedad magazine, July 2010”:

“Cerveza Conquer presenta su web”

In the example above and in the Spanish context, “web” functions as a noun. The term “web” according to the Spanish grammar rules, can be pluralized by adding the morpheme “-s” at the end of the word.

Neither morphological nor phonological changes were done in order to adapt the term “web” into Spanish by Royal Spanish Academy.

This term “web” has its equivalent in Spanish and this is “red infomatica”, but the term “web” is used in order to emphasize the use of technological tools as the Internet.

Personally I do not agree with using this term in our lexicon, because it has its equivalent in Spanish. So I think this term does not enrich the Spanish Language. “Web” is the acronym of “World Wide Web” and its translation into Spanish would be “Amplia Red Informatica” or “Red Informatica Mundial” and I think we can abbreviate these words and form a Spanish acronym and it could be “ARI” or “RIM”. This is my personal opinion about this word. I also think “web” is easier to use and understand in the Spanish context, and for that reason, the Royal Spanish Academy took this term and implemented it into the Spanish lexicon.

Eslogan

According to the Merriam - Webster Dictionary, “slogan” is a brief phrase with a marketing purpose. It is a short and easily remembered phrase, especially when one uses it to advertise an idea or a product.

According to the definition provided by Merriam – Webster Dictionary, this term comes from the alteration of earlier “slogorn” from Scottish, but in order to be adapted into Spanish, the Royal Spanish Academy took the word “slogan” from English, so it is considered as an anglicism.

“Como dice su eslogan: “el mundo está en Shangai” (Gestión magazine 2010)

Sometimes this word is pluralized by adding the morpheme “-s” at the end of it.

“Eslogan” is adapted into Spanish by adding the prefix “e-” because in Spanish, the consonant cluster “sl” does not exist. For this reason the morpheme “e-” is placed before the consonant cluster “sl” in order to fit the Spanish pronunciation.

Apparently, there is not an equivalent in Spanish for “slogan” in order to emphasize a product or a mark. The word is adapted to the Spanish lexicon following some rules and changing its morphological aspect. I think this term enriches the Spanish language.

Blush

We can find the word “blush” in the Merriam-Webster Dictionary. It functions as a verb, and according to this lexical category, it has its synonyms: “become embarrassed, flush, turn red, be red in the face, become blushed, color up, get red in the face, turn red, as if in embarrassment or shame; become rosy or reddish”. For instance: “The girl blushed when a young man whistled as she walked by”.

Syntactically, this word is a noun. For that reason it can be pluralized by adding the morpheme “-es”. It has its synonyms; contextually it means “embarrass, make blush, shame, bring shame upon, fluster, abash; cause to be embarrassed; cause to feel self-conscious”.

The word “blush” functions as a noun in the example below taken from “Hogar magazine, July 2010”

“La aplicación del blush debe ser sutil.”

The word “blush” comes from Middle English and it is not accepted by Royal Spanish Academy. Spanish speakers use the term “blush” in order to refer to a sort of makeup used by women on their cheeks.

The term “Colorete” is the Spanish equivalent for “blush”. I think it is not necessary to use the word “blush” in order to refer to this kind of cosmetic, so I think “blush” damages the Spanish language.

Cake

According to the definition provided by Merriam - Webster Dictionary, the word “cake” means a sweet food made with a mixture of flour, eggs, fat and sugar. Its origin is from Middle English.

This word is not accepted by Royal Spanish Academy. The term “cake” has its Spanish equivalent such as “pastel” and “torta”. However this word is used in Ecuadorian magazines and by common people. When people speak, it is quite normal that they use word “cake” or “key”. So its phonological aspect is adapted by the Spanish language. Its lexical category is a noun, and it can be pluralized only by adding an “-s” at the end of the word.

In the following sentences taken from “Hogar magazine, July 2010, the word “cake” is written in its original form and it function as a noun “...era un cake de 11 pisos y mas de 3 metros de altura.”

As previously stated, this word has its equivalents in Spanish, “pastel” and “torta”, so I think this work “cake” does not enrich the Spanish language.

Coach

According to the definition provided by Merriam - Webster Dictionary, this word refers to a private tutor who teaches sports. This word comes from Middle English. The term “coach” is not included in the Royal Spanish Dictionary, so it is not recognized by the Spanish Royal Academy.

This word has synonyms in Spanish; “tutor” or “entrenador”. However this word is not used frequently. It refers to a person who teaches sports or any other activity as shows the following example taken from Hogar magazine, July 2010: “La doctora María Isabel Navarro, sicoterapeuta y coach personal Espanola, escribe en su pagina web que muchas veces la mujeres nos cuestionamos...”

In order to adapt or use the word “coach” in the Spanish language, it should keep its original form without morphological and phonological changes.

I think “coach” should not be used in the Spanish language because this word has its equivalents in Spanish. Furthermore, this word is not used frequently, so people are not familiarized with the term “coach” and it is difficult to understand the context in the reading.

Confort

This word refers to something that produces well - being and convenience. It is important to know that “confort” comes from the English word, “comfort”. This word means “comodidad, comfort”.

The term “confort” is accepted by Royal Spanish Academy. In order to adapt this word into Spanish some transformations were done as is seen in the following example taken from Hogar magazine, July 2010:

“...combinar el lujo y el confort.”

According to the Royal Spanish Dictionary, the word “confort” is a noun, but according to the Merriam Webster Dictionary, this word could be a noun and a verb, depending on the context.

The written form in English is “comfort”, but The Royal Spanish Academy adapted this word by replacing the consonant “m” by “n”. The grammar Spanish rule says “the morpheme “m” is positioned before “b” and “p”. According to this rule, the morpheme “m” is not correct to place before “f”. So it was replaced by “n”.

As a consequence of this morphological change, “confort” changed its phonological form too, in order to fit the rule.

This term has its equivalent in Spanish, but it is recognized by Royal Spanish Academy, so I think the term “confort” enriches the Spanish language because it emphasizes the context and increases the lexicon.

Jersey

According to the definition provided by Merriam - Webster Dictionary, “jersey” means: a piece of clothing made from wool or cotton, which has sleeves and is worn on the upper part of the body. This word “jersey” comes from English. The Royal Spanish Academy has recognized this term in its dictionary as is shown the example below taken from Hogar magazine, July 2010:

“Cada uno de sus modelos desfilaron faldas y vestidos ajustados que marcan la figura de la mujer, combinados con jersey y abrigos de piel.”

In Spanish, “jersey” is a noun. It does not change its morphological form; the pronunciation is similar in both English and Spanish.

This word is easy to pronounce and it is easy to relate with a name of the cloth, so I think the word “jersey” enriches the Spanish language.

Estatus

According to the definition provided by Merriam - Webster Dictionary, the meaning of this word is: “an accepted or official position, especially in a social group”. The Merriam - Webster Dictionary states that it is a noun, but it can also be categorized as an adjective as shown in the example below:

“Michael Kors: símbolo de estatus” (Hogar, July 2010, p. 72)

This word comes from English, but also it is derived from Latin “status quo”.

“Estatus” has suffered some morphological changes, because in Spanish the morpheme “e” is added at the beginning in order to be adapted into this language and it sometimes is written in its original form “status”.

“Estatus” comes from the English word “status”. The consonant cluster “st” does not exist in Spanish and because of this, the consonant cluster “st” is preceded by the vowel “e” at the beginning in order to fit Spanish written form. Phonetically, this word does not change because in Spanish the vowel “e” is pronounced similarly as in English. The consonant cluster “st” is pronounced.

I think the word “status” does not have a specific equivalent in the context. For that reason I think the term “estatus” enriches the Spanish lexicon.

Estrés

The Merriam - Webster Dictionary describes “estrés” as “the feeling when tired, worried, nervous or angry about something”.

The word “estrés” comes from “stress”. This term is an English word accepted by Royal Spanish Academy.

Syntactically, this word is a noun in the Spanish dictionary, but in English, it could be used as noun or verb depending on the context. In the following example this word is a noun:

“...especialmente tras un dia lleno de estrés y problemas...”

(Hogar 2010, p. 93)

Morphologically, this term has suffered some changes in order to be recognized by the Spanish language. The consonant clusters “st” and “ss” do not exist in Spanish and consequently, the morpheme “e” is placed before the consonant cluster “st” and the last consonant “s” is suppressed from the word in order to adapt this word to the Spanish language in its written form.

The phonetic system of Spanish changed the word “stress” to “estrés” by adding a stress mark on the vowel “e”.

This word “estres” does not have a specific equivalent in Spanish, so I think the use of this word is necessary in order to improve the context and the Spanish lexicon.

Fan

The definition provided by Merriam - Webster Dictionary states that “fan” means: “someone who admires and supports a person, sport, sports team, etc”.

This word is accepted by Royal Spanish Academy and the Spanish Academy states that “fan” means: “aficionado” or “supporter”. It refers to enthusiasm by being a member of a club, holding fan conventions, creating fanzines, writing fan mail, or by promoting them. A “fan” is a person with a liking and enthusiasm for something.

According to the Merriam - Webster Dictionary, “fan” is a noun and this word can be pluralized by adding a morpheme “s” at the end. In the example below it is used as noun:

“Para que desperdiciar un ‘clic’ en alguien que ya es fan de tu negocio?”

This word comes from English and is used in Spanish in its contracted form “fan”. “Fan” is the contraction or abbreviation of “fanatic”; in Spanish is “fanatico” or “fanatica”. Following Spanish grammar rules, the vowels “o” or “a” are placed at the end of the word depending on the gender described. Its written form is “fan”, so it does not change its structure. Phonetically, the word does not change either because it does not break any rules of Spanish pronunciation.

I think this word enriches the Spanish language because it is used naturally by magazines and people understand its meaning within a context easily.

Link

According to the definition provided by Merriam – Webster Dictionary, the term “link” refers to a connecting structure. This term comes from Middle English; the Royal Spanish Academy does not recognize this term.

This term was found in Hogar magazine, July 2010 in the sentence bellow:

“...poniendo un link junto a la firma de correos electrónicos”

The context in the sentence above “link” is a noun, but it can be a verb, too. This term “link” in Spanish is used to refer to computing fields such as in e-mails or internet fields.

The term “link” has its equivalents in Spanish: “enlazar”, “conectar”, “unir"; however, this word is used in Spanish without any morphological and phonological changes.

This word “link” in my opinion does not enrich the Spanish language because it has its equivalents in Spanish, which could be perfectly used in the same context or computing fields.

Bingo

According to the Merriam – Webster Dictionary, “Bingo” is a game in which prizes can be won by matching numbers on a card with those chosen by chance. This word means the same in English and Spanish.

“Bingo” is recognized by the Royal Spanish Academy and it does not change its morphological form. It is curious the way this word was formed. Some people were playing “beano”, which is a game with beans on a piece of paper and the beans cover the sheet of paper, but suddenly one of the player shouted out “bingo” instead of “beano”; since that moment, this term has been in existence.

This word is a noun and its equivalent in Spanish is “lotería” or “juego de azar”. Even though this word has a meaning in Spanish, the word is already being used by people in order to indicate the game they are playing. For that reason, I think this word enriches and increases the lexicon of the Spanish language.

Cheque

According to the definition provided by Merriam - Webster Dictionary, “cheque” is a noun and it means that is a printed form used instead of money, in order to make payments from a bank account.

According to the Royal Spanish Academy, “Cheque” is a document which is given to get money at the bank. “Cheque” is a derivation of “check” of Old English. In the medieval period its written form was “chek” and now is “check”, had different meanings such as “detener”, “rodear”, “comprobar” and “verificar”; later on this document was named “check” in the United States and “cheque” in England.

“...que al parecer sustrajeron varios cheques de la víctima”.

In the example above, the word “cheque” is a noun stated in the dictionaries, and this term can be pluralized adding by the morpheme “s” at the end.

This word has been adapted to Spanish from its original British form from XIX century, so the word does not change in its morphological and phonetic forms. It was also incorporated in the Royal Spanish Dictionary in 1899.

The term “cheque” has been used in the Spanish language for a century. This word is very common in our culture and I think this term is necessary to refer to money. I think there is not a Spanish equivalent for “check” so this word enriches the Spanish language.

Chip

According to the Merriam – Webster Dictionary, “chip” “is a very small piece of semiconductor, especially in a computer, that contains extremely small electronic circuits and devices, and can perform particular operations”.

This word comes from the English language and the Royal Spanish Dictionary, has accepted it with the definition “an integrated circuit which makes many functions in computers and electronics mechanism”.

According to the Royal Spanish Academy, this word is a noun, and for that reason it can be pluralized only by adding the morpheme “s” at the end of the word.

The example below taken from Vistazo magazine, June 2010: indicates the word “chip” as a noun:

“Sistema en un chip”

The pronunciation is the same in both Spanish and in English. This word was adopted into Spanish without changes to its written form, so morphologically it does not change.

This word does not have equivalents in Spanish and it is used frequently to talk about technology. I think this word enriches the Spanish language.

Clip

According to the Merriam Webster Dictionary this word could be a noun and a verb as shown in the example below taken from Vistazo magazine, June 2011:

“Y una tercera forma de tortura fue ponerme la pistola en la cabeza, ponerme la pistola en la boca, soltar el gatillo, sonaba clip y uno ya pensaba que ya volaba ese rato...” As a verb, the meaning is “to bang”.

According to the Royal Spanish Dictionary, the meaning in Spanish is “sujetador” or “broche” and it is a noun as in the example below:

“Felipe necesita un clip para sus papeles”

Syntactically, this word is a noun and it can be pluralized only by adding the morpheme “s” at the end of the word. As a result, the word changes to “clips”.

This word does not change because it is already adapted to Spanish; the written form is the same in both Spanish and English.

This word comes from English, although this is a foreign word, it is recognized by Royal Spanish Academy and it is included in the dictionary in order to enrich the Spanish language and make it more variable.

Detective

According to the Royal Spanish Dictionary and Merriam – Webster Dictionary, this word “detective” means: “a person who investigates an especial case”.

This word is recognized by Royal Spanish Academy; however this word has meanings in Spanish such as “agente”, “investigador”, “policia”.

According to Royal Spanish Dictionary, this word is a noun as shows the example below:

“La última persona que los vio es el detective privado...” (Vistazo

June 2010, p. 20)

Moreover, this word does not have any morphological changes in order to belong to Royal Spanish Dictionary.

The term “Detective” is also written in the same form in Spanish and in English. It only varies in the pronunciation because in Spanish, the third syllable has a stress mark and in English the intonation is stronger in the second syllable and also the last vowel “e” is not pronounced.

I had read this word before to do this investigation and I did not imagine this term “detective” was an English word; it was a surprise for me. I could not believe it, because this term is very common and it is used so much in magazines and people say it frequently. In other words, I think this demonstrates that this word has increased the Spanish language and enriched the lexicon.

Líder

According to Royal Spanish Dictionary the word “Líder” refers to a person who is followed by other people in a group.

Etymologically, “líder” comes from English. It is the derivation of “leader” and the Royal Spanish Academy has accepted this word in its dictionary, but with some changes in order to adapt it into Spanish grammar. First of all, “líder” is a noun according to Royal Spanish Dictionary, and the example below shows it:

“...siendo el líder en todas las variables...” (Gestión, June 2010, p. 20)

This word is not only a noun, it can be a verb as in “liderar”. As a verb, it can be conjugated in all tenses depending on the context. The verbs in Spanish are formed adding the suffixes “-ar”, “-er”, “-ir”.

Moreover, morphologically the vowels “ea” are replaced by “i” in order to be adapt into Spanish. In addition, following the Spanish grammar rules, the stress mark is placed over the morpheme “i”. This word was adapted to Spanish with these morphological changes.

The term “Líder” has changed its morphological form in order to adapt to the Spanish language, but it has tried to keep its original phonology.

This word is frequently used by magazines in order to maintain the meaning within a context. This term was accepted by the Royal Spanish Academy in order to increase and enrich the Spanish language. This term is widely used in Spanish.

Futbol

According to the definition provided by Merriam – Webster Dictionary, “futbol” is a game played on a rectangle field with net goals at either end in which two teams of eleven players drive a ball into the other’s goal by kicking, heading, or using any part of the body except the arms and hands.

The term “futbol” comes from the English word “football”.

The word “futbol” has suffered some changes in order to be adapted into the Spanish language, the first one is the morpheme “oo” which was replaced by the morpheme “u”. The vowel “a” was deleted and replaced by the morpheme “-o”, and the last change the double “l” was deleted.

All these changes were done in order to adapt “futbol” to the Spanish grammar rules; these slightly change the phonology from English to Spanish.

This word refers to a sport which is very popular around the world. This term is frequently used in all variables, so I think this word enhances the Spanish vocabulary; however, this term “futbol” has its equivalent in Spanish “balon pie”, although this is not a term frequently used in Spanish.

Tenis

The Royal Spanish Academy states “tenis” as “is a game played with rackets and a light ball by two players or two pairs of players on a rectangular court, as of grass, clay, or asphalt, divided by a net.”

This word “tenis” comes from English which is a shorter form of “tennis” and is recognized by the Royal Spanish Academy.

The term “tenis” is a noun, as demonstrated the example below taken from Vistazo, June 2010:

“Entonces también restrinjamos el futbol, el box, el tenis”.

When adapted into Spanish, this word suffered some changes. According to Spanish grammar rules, the consonant cluster “nn” does not exist, so the morpheme “n” was deleted. Therefore, its written form changed to “tenis”.

Phonetically, this word does not have any changes at all.

This word “tenis” does not have equivalents in Spanish. This word refers to a sport, and I think this word has enriched the Spanish lexicon.

Photoshop

According to the Merriam – Webster Dictionary, “photoshop” means a popular high – end image editor for Macintosh and Windows from Adobe. The original Mac versions were the first to bring affordable image editing down to the personal computer level in the late 1980’s. Since then, the term “photoshop” has become the de facto standard in image editing.

Although it contains a large variety of image editing features, one of Photoshop’s most powerful capabilities is layers, which allows images to be rearranged under an over each other for placement.

This word is not accepted by the Royal Spanish Academy, but it is used in the Spanish language. Even though The Royal Spanish Academy does not register this word, there is no synonym that can express the same notion in Spanish. This word does not have any morphological and phonological changes.

This word is new in the English lexicon, according to the Merriam – Webster Dictionary, this word appeared in 1992.

I think this word is not recognized by the Royal Spanish Academy because it is not frequently used by people. In my opinion, this word does not enrich the Spanish language, so it is expected that the Royal Spanish Academy will look for a synonym to replace it.

Comparative Analysis

Anglicisms are an important factor in increasing the Spanish lexicon. Some anglicisms are recognized by the Spanish Royal Academy and others are not accepted. However, anglicisms are used in order to provide nuances in meaning and synonyms for words.

The comparative analysis mentions that anglicisms are used the most in Ecuadorian magazines. Moreover, it mentions the linguistic reasons for this occurrence and solidifies the general meaning of the expressions.

As a result of this study, the synonym that is used the most is “futbol”. This word appeared 39 times during this study; “futbol” was found in the general interest magazines with a frequency of 20 times. This phenomenon occurs because this word is very common for referring to the sport known around the world. For example, “the world cup of football” was celebrated this year.

“Web” is the second most frequently used anglicism in this study; it is used around the world as a word to define Internet sites, and for that reason it is a very common utterance. This term was used the most in general interest and scholarly magazines, with a total of 36 occurrences.

Another frequently used anglicism is “lider”, which was especially used in the scholarly magazines where it appeared approximately 38 times with five repetitions in the general interest variable as well. However, it is important to note that a characteristic of this word is its derivations in its morphological and semantic aspects; thus this utterance is very extensive. In addition, it is important to mention the term “ranking,” which was found with the same amount of repetitions in the same variables with almost the same statistics as “lider.”

The word “detective,” which was found in the cultural magazine, had a great quantity of repetitions. “Detective” is followed by the word “gol.” This expression was found only in the general interests magazines with a total of 18 repetitions. “Video” also had a total of 18 repetitions in the general interest magazine.

Another frequently used term was “marketing” with a total of 13 reoccurrence. This word was more common in the general interest magazines.

Another word, which was used several times by these variables, is “mall”, which had 12 repetitions. This is followed by “aerolinea” and “liderazgo,” which have the same number of repetitions (11) and which placed tenth in this list of top ten anglicisms.

In conclusion, this analysis reveals that the most frequently used anglicisms were found in the general interest magazines with a total of 287, equivalent to 49 percent of the findings in all the variables. One reason for this is because the articles discuss realistic and practical themes such as fashion, technology, and showbiz, and thus relate to a diverse audience. The scholarly magazine placed second with a total of 207 anglicisms, or 36 percent. In last place are the cultural magazines with a total of 90 anglicisms, or 15 percent of the findings in all the variables.

Because Ecuador is in relative close proximity to the United States, there are a great amount of anglicisms used in all the variables and in all kinds of speech.

Personally, I think the majority of these words enhance and enrich the Spanish language because it is better to have a verbal communication and written communication with an extensive vocabulary. People can use many of these anglicisms naturally in order to improve the context. Therefore, I think that if a person knows and uses more words that are borrowed from another language, this person demonstrates that people are wealthy in linguistic knowledge.

Conclusions

- As a conclusion, after having analyzed those anglicisms, it can be stated that anglicisms enrich the lexical way of speaking because they increases the Spanish lexicon. Anglicisms have become widespread, and thus it is important to vary speech with different expressions or synonyms.
- Ecuadorians use anglicisms in order to be able to communicate. In the case of magazines, they wrote their texts with a variety of understandable words in order to expand their reading audience.
- Magazines use anglicisms in their written texts. This phenomenon occurs because they are influenced by technology, terminology referring to the Internet and other communication media which is always increasing
- Ecuadorian magazines are influenced by English language. For this reason there is a great amount of anglicisms in their variables.
- This study determined that there exist a great number of anglicisms, which are mostly used in some cases in all variables. The amount of anglicisms used in different variables is high. So, it demonstrates that many people are familiarized with these words.

- There are a great number of anglicisms that can be adapted into Spanish which could improve the context. This indicates that many people are familiarized with these words.
- The phenomenon of anglicisms used in Ecuadorian magazines is significant and they are used in a natural way among readers.
